

New York's great museums could do better

David Gordon

Revise opening hours, not just ticket prices

Museums like to say they welcome everybody yet they charge for admission and restrict opening days and hours. The biggest and best, the Metropolitan Museum of Art, raised its "recommended" admission price by 25% to a hefty $25 on 1 July. It was swiftly followed by New York's other leading museum, the Museum of Modern Art (MoMA), which increased its non-voluntary admission price to the same level from 1 September. Both museums are closed for one day a week. Are they setting a bad example?

On admission charges, the answer is no. On opening times, the answer is yes.

At first sight, the New York giants charge more than most. At recent exchange rates, $25 was the equivalent of €17—70% higher than the €10 charged by the Musée du Louvre and the Museo Nacional del Prado and infinitely more than the free admission to the national museums in London. However, New York museums include special exhibitions in the price of entry, whereas Tate Modern, for example, is charging £15.50 (about $25, or €18) for its Miró exhibition, and the Louvre €11 ($16, £10) for temporary exhibitions in the Salle Napoléon. The Prado includes temporary exhibitions for €10, but gives visitors the option of seeing the permanent collection for only €8.

European museums, being mostly state-supported, tend to offer free or inexpensive entry to their collections but differential pricing for exhibitions. This gives visitors a choice, and accords with logic. Exhibitions are expensive one-offs that justify an extra charge.

London and Washington, DC are among the few places with free admission to super-museums. In London, attendances have risen since free admission was introduced in 2003. However, museums have not been fully reimbursed by government for the extra expense of dealing with such large visitor numbers. Extra shop and restaurant income does not cover the extra costs of dealing with the crowds, and people who could afford to pay do not donate an equivalent sum instead. Museums remain admission-rich but cash-poor.

Leading the charge

Super-museums can afford free or inexpensive admission only with government support. The New York museums get substantial sums from the City but not enough to cover free entry. But do they have to charge so much? It is sensible to charge what the market will bear. The Met had 5.6 million visitors in the year to June, boosted by the brilliant "Savage Beauty: Alexander McQueen" exhibition. Arguably, $25 is not that much in New York. Those who visit the museum frequently become members and culture tourists are not very price sensitive. The less affluent are likely to be deterred by $15 as $25.

Value for money? MoMA's general admission price is now $25

MoMA and the Met get an appreciable slice of their revenue—more than 15%—from admissions, and so need to keep raising the price. Perhaps it would be sensible to do so yearly instead of in occasional big leaps. Perhaps they should experiment with European-style differential pricing for their collections and exhibitions. But what they must do is find a way of catering to those kept out by cost.

MoMA has "Target Free Fridays" from 4pm to 8pm, but judging by the lines outside and the crush inside, this is not enough. The Met has signs by the cash register that say "recommended" price, but this is somewhat disingenuous, since the signs do not go on to explain that people can actually pay what they want—for the very good reason that this loophole would be exploited. Better to follow the Louvre and have free admission to the permanent collection on the first Sunday of every month.

There are free museums in smaller cities, such as the Nelson-Atkins Museum of Art in Kansas City, and the St Louis Museum of Art, both in Missouri, and the Indianapolis Museum of Art. Their attendance figures are commensurately higher than comparable museums that charge and they have large enough endowments to make free admission possible. Assuredly New York's museums would go free provided someone would give them the money so to do.

"The most basic element of accessibility is to be open for as long as possible, to allow as many people as possible to visit"

While nothing much can be done about price, the same is not true of access. Every Monday, except on public holidays, the Met is closed. On Tuesdays it's MoMA's turn. On Thursday, the Guggenheim. The Whitney Museum of American Art is closed on Mondays and Tuesdays, but still argues it needs to move to bigger premises downtown. Encouragingly, MoMA this year experimented with seven-day opening during the height of the tourist season in July and August.

New York's art museums are in good company. Most other American art museums are closed for at least one day a week, as are most museums around the world: the Prado is closed on Mondays and the Louvre on Tuesdays.

The most basic element of accessibility is to be open for as long as possible, to allow as many people as possible to visit. It is not a law that museums should have a day of rest. Across Central Park, the Natural History Museum of America is open every day, as are the Art Institute of Chicago, the Museum of Fine Arts, Boston, the National Gallery of Art and all the Smithsonian museums. So too is every major museum in London.

Where there's a will...

Why does adventurous New York, capital of the art world, fall in with Old Europe's practices?

Two reasons are commonly given. Practicality is the most powerful. Time is needed to move objects around, clean away the marks of sticky fingers and install exhibitions. These are strong considerations. But where there's a will there must be a way. Art museums that do manage to open all week close galleries off when needed or work before and after closing times—Frank Lloyd Wright's Guggenheim spiral could justify an exemption.

Economics is the second reason. The largest department in most museums in terms of numbers is security, and the extra cost of paying unionised guards to work an extra day is judged to outweigh the extra revenue from visitors. No one is going to advocate weaker security but if the high cost of providing it negates other obligations, then it is an issue that needs to be tackled.

One fear is that the number of visitors over six days would be levelled out over seven, so there would be no extra revenue. This argument has more validity in cities with weaker demand for museum-going than New York, whose major museums are bursting at the seams. It is likely that each of them would gain visitors overall if they were all open daily. And if the net result of a longer opening week is that the museum-going experience is simply a less crowded one, then that would be a gain in satisfaction that might be translated into donation dollars.

Art museums tend to be conservative and should do a better job of finding ways of improving access for those who can't afford to pay and of staying open for as long as possible where there is clear demand. ■

The writer was the director of the Milwaukee Art Museum, and before that the secretary of London's Royal Academy of Arts. He is now a consultant

THE ART NEWSPAPER

THE ART NEWSPAPER is published by Umberto Allemandi & Co. Publishing Ltd ISSN 0960-6556
EDITORIAL STAFF AND CONTRIBUTORS
LONDON-BASED
Editor Jane Morris Deputy editor Javier Pes Art market editor (Europe, Asia, Africa) Melanie Gerlis Literary editor Donald Lee Conservation and research editor Emily Sharpe Production editor Ria Hopkinson Editorial assistant Julia Michalska Editors-at-large Georgina Adam (art market), Gareth Harris, Cristina Ruiz Design Emma Goodman Listings James Hobbs Copy editing Iain Millar, Anny Shaw Editorial intern/trainee Riah Pryor
NEW YORK-BASED
News and art market editor (Americas) Charlotte Burns Website editor and New York editorial manager Helen Stoilas Editorial assistant Bonnie Rosenberg Contributing editor András Szántó

CORRESPONDENTS

Martin Bailey, Louisa Buck, Roger Bevan, Viv Lawes, Iain Millar, Anny Shaw (UK); David D'Arcy, Judith Dobrzynski, Anthony Haden-Guest, Marisa Mazria Katz, Brook Mason, Charmaine Picard, Linda Yablonsky (US); Martha Lufkin (US legal correspondent); Elizabeth Fortescue (Australia); Silas Martí (Brazil); Chris Gill, Alexandra Seno, Iona Whittaker (China); Lauren Gelfond Feldinger (Israel); Franco Fanelli, Federico Castelli Gattinara, Alessandro Martini, Edek Osse (Italy); Axel Lapp, Rito Pokorny (Germany); Roxana Azimi, Claudia Barbieri, Philippe Régnier, (France); Richard Unwin, Cristina Carrillo de Albornoz, Nicolas Smirnoff (Spain); Clemens Bomsdorf (Scandinavia/Germany)
DIRECTORS AND PUBLISHING
Publisher Umberto Allemandi Group editorial director Anna Somers Cocks Managing director James Knox Associate publisher Patrick Kelly Finance Alessandro Iobbi Acting head of sales (UK)/advertising manager (UK) Ben Tomlinson Head of sales (US) Caitlin Miller Advertising executive (UK) Omid Khodabakhsh Webmaster Eyal Lavi Office administrator Belinda Seppings Ad production Daniela Hathaway
CONTACT US
In the UK: 70 South Lambeth Road, London SW8 1RL Tel: +44 (0)20 7735 3331 Fax: +44 (0)20 7735 3332 Email: londonoffice@theartnewspaper.com

In the US:

594 Broadway, Suite 406, New York, NY 10012 Tel: +1 212 343 0727 Fax: +1 212 965 5367 Email: nyoffice@theartnewspaper.com

website: www.theartnewspaper.com

All Americas subscription enquiries Tel: +1 888 475 5993

All other subscription enquiries Tel: +44 (0)1795 414 863

HOW TO SUBSCRIBE

The Art Newspaper comes out 11 times a year (not in August)

In the Americas

Please pay $115 by cheque or credit card, made out to "The Art Newspaper", and send to:

The Subscription Department, FULCO, PO Box 3000, Denville, NJ 07834-9776. Call toll-free: +1 888 475 5993. Tel: +1 973 627 2427. Fax: +1 973 627 5872

All other territories

UK: Please pay £85 by credit card or by cheque made out to "The Art Newspaper".

Continental Europe: Please pay €110 by credit card or cheque made out to "The Art Newspaper".

In the rest of the world: Please pay £90 by credit card or cheque made out to "The Art Newspaper" and send to:

The Art Newspaper, PO Box 326, Sittingbourne, Kent ME9 8FA. Tel: +44 (0)1795 414 863. Fax: +44 (0)1795 414 555

Email: theartnewspaper@servicehelpline.co.uk

You can subscribe online at:

www.theartnewspaper.com/subscribe

DISTRIBUTION

International

Retail: Seymour Distribution Ltd, 2 East Poultry Avenue, London EC1A 9PT. Tel: +44 (0)20 7429 4000. Email: info@seymour.co.uk

Specialist Retail: Central Books, 99 Wallis Road, London E9 5LN. Tel: +44 (0)845 458 9925

TO ADVERTISE, please contact:

Americas Caitlin Miller. Tel. +1 212 343 0727, fax +1 212 965 5367 France, Belgium, Switzerland Dominique Thomas. Tel. +33 1 48 42 90 04, fax +33 1 48 42 90 01 Italy Cinzia Fattori. Tel. +39 011 819 9119, fax +39 011 819 3090 UK and rest of world Louise Hamlin. Tel. +44 (0)20 7735 3331, fax +44 (0) 20 7735 3332

Umberto Allemandi & Co. Publishing Ltd, Registration No: 5166640. © 2011 The Art Newspaper. Periodicals postage paid at Middlesex NJ 08846 and additional mailing offices. Printed in UK by: Benham Goodhead Print Limited, Chaucer Business Park, Launton Road, Bicester, OX26 4QZ. The Art Newspaper is the International Edition in the II Giornali dell'Arte network, 8 via Manzini, 10131 Turin, Italy. Tel: +39 011 819 9111, fax: +39 011 819 3090. Registered with the Turin Tribunal: No. 4268 dated 28/11/1990. Copyright © 2011 Umberto Allemandi & Co. Publishing. All rights reserved. No part of this newspaper may be reproduced in whole or in part without written consent of copyright proprietor. Prices and valuations in The Art Newspaper are for the guidance of readers only and no legal responsibility whatsoever will be accepted for any such information so given. The Art Newspaper is not responsible for statements expressed in the signed articles and interviews. While every care is taken by the publishers, the contents of advertisements are the responsibility of the individual advertisers.

Paul Winstanley

September - October, 2011

Arman
Basquiat
Christo
Dine
Francis
Haring
Hay
Indiana

Katz
Lichtenstein
Picasso
Sultan
Rivers
Warhol
Wesselmann
Young

NEW YORK

■ Taglialetella
Galleries

PALM BEACH

www.taglialettagalleries.com

PARIS

©Andy Warhol. Silkscreen and polymer ink on canvas